Soils require very careful handling to produce good yields. Low agricultural value. 9. Areas of red clay. A strong productive soil, though somewhat difficult to handle. General farming and dairying. Alfalfa successful where drainage is adequate. Good grass land. Wisconsin stands for progress and achievement. Along the line of agriculture this state offers opportunities which are equaled by few, if any, of the other states in the Union. Wisconsin leads all other states in the development of the dairy industry. In 1909 there were 6,235 creameries in the United States and of these 1,000 were in Wisconsin. At the same time there were 3,846 cheese factories in the United States, of which 1,784 were in Wisconsin. In the variety, quality and yield per acre of crops the state occupies a front position. The following summary shows Wisconsin s standing among the states producing sufficient quantity of the various crops to warrant consideration. The irrigated states are not included for the reason that the cost and labor of irrigation are not clearly enough determined so that an accurate comparison can be made. The rating for corn, barley, oats, spring wheat, potatoes and flax are for the ten years 1901-1910 inclusive, while the others are from the latest tables, all being from the statistics...
